

PROVIDING EDUCATIVE THERAPEUTIC ASSISTANCE (PEDOTHERAPY]

By

Millie Olivier

ABSTRACT

By

George D. Yonge

In the following two chapters attention is given to pedotherapy and parental guidance as orthopedagogic interventions with respect to behaviorally restrained children. Chapter 9 presents a synoptic theoretical foundation where the emphasis is on the essential nature of helping a child and in which pedotherapy is shown to differ from ordinary psychotherapy applied to children; in addition, the highly structured nature of pedotherapy is elucidated. Clear guidelines for pedotherapeutic practice are indicated, especially for preparing helping strategies, in general, and for individual sessions. In Chapter 10 some popular helping techniques are viewed from an orthopedagogic perspective. By interpreting these techniques from this perspective one avoids falling into a mere eclecticism which would likely result if each technique were considered only on its own merits without regard to orthopedagogic (and hence pedagogic) criteria.

Translated by

George D. Yonge

[Edited March 2024]

Part III

of

P. A. van Niekerk (editor).

Die opvoedkundige-sielkundige.

Stellenbosch: University and Booksellers, 1986.

Entire book translated as:

Educational psychology as orthopedagogics

and available at: georgeyonge.net